

The American Constitution Society released two important new books that will shape the ongoing debate over how to interpret our nation’s founding document and discussions about judges and the courts. The lead book, Keeping Faith with the Constitution, exposes right-wing slogans such as “originalism” and “strict construction” and articulates a vision of the Constitution and an approach to interpretation that is both faithful to the words of the document and at the same time has enabled the Constitution to retain its relevance for each new generation of Americans. It is designed to be accessible to a wide range of readers. Keeping Faith with the Constitution was written by constitutional scholars Goodwin Liu, Pamela S. Karlan and Christopher H. Schroeder. A companion volume called It Is a Constitution We Are Expounding: Collected Writings on Interpreting Our Founding Document, was edited by Pamela Harris and Karl Thompson, with a foreword by Professor Laurence H. Tribe.

Both books, along with brief podcast interviews with the authors, as well as supporting materials, are available for free download at:
